

To Whom It May Concern

The University of Glasgow commissioned DisabledGo to produce an access survey for many of our buildings and services and we were very impressed with the professional service they provided in completing an audit in a very challenging environment.

Our University's aim is to recruit talented students and staff regardless of disability. We recognise that DisabledGo enables prospective applicants to have confidence that the University is suitable for their individual requirements, and we consider these things matter.

DisabledGo's guides enable our current disabled students to enjoy more of the social life of the University, the important 'co-curriculum' which informs so much of a student's perspective and opinion of their University. The hit count to our section of DisabledGo's website has shown that its service provides an added value to disabled students and staff.

Our values and aspirations are for the highest education standards within an accessible and inclusive learning environment. We felt that an international access guide that located the University within global standard of access information provision – rather than each University doing "its own thing" – was a key step in meeting these goals.

We have enjoyed working with DisabledGo and would highly recommend a meeting with them to see if your University could enjoy similar benefits.
